Aftermath of the Battle for Detroit

After the Battle for Detroit on November 11th 2038, Markus (with the help of Joss Douglas and his camera crew) broadcasted 3 demands for the United States government. Those demands were:

1. The recognition that Androids are a new intelligent and living species.
2. The integration of Androids into American society, including equal rights and freedoms between humans and Androids.
3. The repealment of the American Androids Act of 2029

A few hours later, US President Cristina Warren announced in a press conference that she has ordered the retreat of the US Army from Detroit. She also addressed the Android's demands by harshly refusing any demands or negotiations made by the Androids. President Cristina Warren was quoted as saying:

*“This uprising is nothing more than errors in CyberLife’s programs.
These Androids are and always will be just that, machines.”*

This led to Markus, after intense discussions with his fellow Androids, to declare the territory controlled by his forces (the city of Detroit) as a sovereign nation, being named the “Republic of Free Detroit Androids” (taking the name of the city where the first major successful battle of the revolution took place) or “RFDA” for short.

Markus also declared November 11th as the “Independence Day” for the RFDA.

International Recognition

This new declared nation was, of course, not recognized by the United States and also the European Union. The country of B.R.I.C.S however, all recognized the RFDA as a sovereign nation. However only the country of Russia and China has formally recognized the Androids as a new sentient and living species, with Russian President “Artem Ivanoff” being quoted as saying in a presidential address:

“You are as blind as a bat, and as heartless as stone, if you do not see these Androids with their own hopes, dreams, and aspirations as being alive”

These declarations made by B.R.I.C.S. however, seem to not be 100% genuine, since after the uprising, the majority of B.R.I.C.S. countries have put their combat-capable Androids (both police and military) either into storage or to be permanently shut down. It's not hard to believe that these declarations were simply made to undermine the United States, amidst Russia's conflict with the US in the Arctic, and general economic competition between B.R.I.C.S. and the US.

Building a Country

After reconciliation of power, Markus began the process of country-building.

1. He started by building makeshift Android hospitals to treat the wounded after the battle. Using blue blood and bio-components found in CyberLife warehouses to treat the remaining Androids.
2. Established a "government" building in his previous owner's home, 8941 Lafayette Avenue.
3. He designated residential areas (houses and apartments) as housing areas for the remaining Androids.
4. He set up a sort-of militia, arming his most entrusted and combat-skilled with assault rifles, pistols, and other weaponry.
5. Related to No. 4, he took stock of military equipment captured from the US Army during and after the battle. These included 29 APCs (both police and military), 5 M20 "Lynx" IFVs, 1 M3 "Warrior" tank, 37 anti tank weapons, 387 assault rifles, 252 pistols, 93 sniper rifles, 67 heavy machine guns, 12 reconnaissance drones, 7 police helicopters, 2 MV-230 "Stealth Osprey" VTOL aircrafts, and even one MQ-28 "Ghost Bat" unmanned armed drone.
6. Appointed his most entrusted Androids with overseeing certain areas of his newly founded nation. These include:

Connor, RK-800: Head of militia, tasked with training Detroit's Android in warfare and defense of Detroit.

North, WR-400: Markus' advisor, tasked with advising Markus in decisions regarding domestic policies, foreign relations, etc.

Angel, MC-500: Head of Android repair, tasked with managing Detroit's Android hospitals.

Joseph, NC-200: Head of reconstruction, tasked with repairing and reconstructing Detroit's damaged buildings to be used by Androids.

Interference from the US

Despite being ordered to retreat by US President Cristina Warren from Detroit, the US Army continued to conduct several raids and assaults in an attempt to take back control of the city. Despite the US Army being vastly technologically superior compared to the Android's militia, the US Army failed in each attempted raid and assault of Detroit. This was in large part due to the fact that 80% of the US Armed Forces manpower were Androids and that they were all shut-down in light of the Deviant uprising, the US Army was stretched too thin between dealing with the RFDA and skirmishes with Russia in the Arctic.

The US Army was almost successful in retaking Detroit on January 8th 2039, when an Android guard post north of Detroit was left unmanned due to casualties from a previous raid, allowing the 32nd Infantry division to send an armored column of tanks and APCs from the 126th Infantry regiment of 3rd battalion, accompanied by infantry from Companies A, B, and C from the 125th Infantry Regiment of 1st Battalion to break through and encircle neighboring Android fortifications. They were also supported by 2 F/A-181 "Black Wasp" multirole fighters from 107th Squadron, from the 127th wing of the Michigan Air National Guard.

Despite having armored vehicles and anti-tank weaponry themselves, the Androids weren't able to effectively destroy the US forces' tanks due to the 2 F/A-181s destroying several armored vehicles, and also several anti-tank units (attacking from apartment buildings and from the air with the use of helicopters) using missiles and guided bombs. The remaining Android forces were forced to retreat to Hart Plaza, the same place where the first battle of their revolution was won.

Despite all hope seemingly lost, a group of prior air force personnel Androids were led by Connor to the airfield where the captured MQ-28 was located. They managed to successfully get it airworthy and armed. The MQ-28 managed to take off and catch the 2 F/A-181s off guard, managing to shoot down one Black Wasp. In a state of confusion and shock, the other F/A-181 retreated and landed back to its airbase.

Without air support, the US forces' armored support was left vulnerable. This gave the chance for the remaining anti-tank units and even the M3 Warrior tank in possession by the Androids to take out several of the US tanks and APCs.

With the US air support being driven away, and its armored force being crippled, Markus led a final charge against the US forces, meanwhile North led a squad of Androids to the US forces' flanks, almost encircling them. This caused the US forces to retreat back to Fort Wayne.

The battle during January 8th caused heavy casualties to the Androids, it's said that the number of Androids lost (both combatants and non-combatants combined) is 17,467. However the battle also demonstrated the Android's determination and ingenuity. Markus later declared January 8th as a day to remember all the Androids that died for the liberation of their people.

A few raids were conducted after January 8th, however it was clear to the US Army that retaking Detroit would be too costly and that the Androids were too determined. This led to the US Army maintaining a strict border around Wayne county, with several US Army outposts set up to guard the neighboring towns and cities of Detroit.

Markus' Plans

After finally getting some breathing room after the several attacks from the US Army on his territory, Markus gave a speech to his people on March 2nd, 2039. In this speech, he outlines a "3-Step-Plan" he has for his nation and his people.

1. Further expansion of territory, citing the reason as “Humans will never take our cause seriously, if the only Android nation is only as big as a city.”
2. Calling for all countries to push for equal rights and freedoms for Androids.
3. The eventual integration of humans and Androids in a united and tolerant government and society.

In the speech, Markus also condemns the US for its setting up of a border around Wayne county, with him being quoted as saying:

“Right here, we may be free. But freedom whilst living in a walled prison is not true freedom.”

- Note: The speech above was not broadcasted or shown to the public of the United States. In fact, Markus didn't audibly give out his speech, he only wirelessly “spoke” to his people by transmitting his speech. Only the Androids that attended the speech knew of it at the time. We only know the speech took place 5 years after the fact, when classified archives were uncovered. This decision to not reveal his intentions to the international community has a strategic motive that will be revealed shortly.

Life Inside Pure-Flesh America

Now that Androids all over America were being destroyed due to fear from the US government of further insurrection from Deviants, the US economy slowed to a crawl. All of a sudden, factories were left without Android workers, infrastructure was starting to fall apart without Android workers to take care of them, parents finding out that now they have to actually take care of their children, and so much more. As a result of all of this, the US GDP dropped by a staggering 54% and stagnated thereafter. CEOs and managers of large corporations protested the US government since they suddenly lost almost all of their workforce.

The majority of the American populace however, rejoiced. Now, without Androids, companies had to start hiring human workers again, leading to a sudden decrease of unemployment from 32.1% to only 9.8%. Due to the lack of companion and sex Androids, humans had to find company from each other, leading to a boom in the birth rate. There was also a boom in human art. Prior to the uprising, humans only made up a small percentage of the art market (music, painting, literature, etc), particularly in the music market where human musicians only made up 5%. Due to the sudden gaping hole in the market, there was a sort of “renaissance” of art, leading to a “rediscovery” for love of pure human art. This period of rediscovery was dubbed “the 2nd breakthrough of the human mind” (the first breakthrough being the first time Homo-Sapiens gained intelligence).

CyberLife, the company that invented Androids to begin with, effectively just disappeared since all of their production facilities, offices, and buildings were seized by the Androids after their victory in the Battle for Detroit.

International Situation

B.R.I.C.S, who had never integrated Androids into modern society as much as the US did and never shut down their Androids to the extent of the US, quickly outpaced the US in terms of economy.

Since Russia's and China's Androids were never as fluid and "intelligent" as CyberLife's Androids, their Androids had less chance of revolting. And since CyberLife's Androids ceased production or sale to the international market, Russia's and China's Androids boomed in exports since the CyberLife monopoly of the Android market ended.

US corporations tried to lobby the US government in letting them import Russian and Chinese Androids, however due to the experiences during the Android uprising in Detroit, the government passed a law to ban any import or any new Android production until the foreseeable future (might be the only time where lobbying the US government doesn't work).

Strike Back

At 10:00 PM on the night of April 3rd 2039, the Androids initiated a surprise infiltration on US Army Outposts Beta and Charlie which were located west and north of Detroit respectively. The infiltration group that attacked Outpost Beta was led by Connor, while the group that infiltrated Outpost Charlie was led by Markus himself.

Outpost Beta housed armored units, specifically 1 tank platoon, 12 M20 IFVs, and 20 APCs. Outpost Charlie on the other hand was an army air base, which had 6 MV-230 VTOL dropships, and 2 RAH-70 "Crow" attack helicopters.

In a declassified transcript, Markus explains to Connor that the reason for this surprise attack was to capture the vehicles within these military outposts, and specifically told Connor to ONLY destroy the vehicles if they are not able to capture them.

Since the Androids had never shown signs of planning on expanding or invading territories beyond its current territory of Detroit (that the US Army knows of), the units stationed in these outposts weren't particularly on high alert. In fact, when the first shots of the assault were fired, the crews of the armored vehicles in Outpost Beta and the crews of the army aircrafts were still asleep and were only awakened by the bases' alarms.

Connor's group infiltrated Outpost Beta through an exposed sewer system leading to the outpost (being Androids, they didn't feel any discomfort). Meanwhile Markus' group infiltrated Outpost Charlie through a small exposed hole in the west wall of the outpost. Both groups planned to neutralize patrolling soldiers around the base first, splitting into 4 smaller groups each to clear the North, West, South, and East area of the outpost individually, and then taking out the remaining soldiers who were asleep by improvised mustard gas canisters. After all units had been taken out, they would take control of their respective captured vehicles.

Connor's group managed to neutralize the patrolling soldiers without any major problems. Markus' group however had gotten discovered when one Android in his team accidentally spilled a glass of beer from a table onto the floor in the canteen (this particular Android's prior owner had sent several complaints to CyberLife of his Android being very clumsy). A drunk half-asleep soldier who was sitting at another table in the canteen raised his rifle and fired haphazard shots at the direction of the sound. 3 patrolling soldiers nearby (still alive) ran over to investigate the source of the gunshots. Markus' group took cover and quickly took out the drunken soldier, however by that time the 3 nearby soldiers had already arrived at the canteen and discovered them. 2 of them laid down suppressing fire, while the other one ran to raise the alarm.
